"His sculpture...is consummately realized. Mr. Michael has the knack for giving his materials — whether they be steel rods or pine branches — sculptural motivation. His wall pieces, in particular, are impressive. They tense, relax, reach, cluster and are not without a sense of humor."

—The New York Observer

"His pieces have a holistic feel in their larger movements, but they draw your attention to the details: the delicate wood ribbing, light glowing through translucent paper, the complex transitions from convex to concave within apparently simple forms. Michael's work presents moments of arrested perfection."

— Art in America*

"He frequently—and in the same work—dips into both painting and sculpture, exploring the pull between things changing and things staying the same.... the overriding impression is a solid vision that is realized through fluidity."

—The New York Times
